

Oh my God! We're obsessed with...

Should you dump a cheat?

Poor old Charlotte Meares. The NOTW's reported Jermaine Defoe's been, ahem, playing away

Charlotte: literally keeping a very close eye on Jermaine from now on

They're a waste of space says Kat Brown

NO

My ex cheated on me with my mate and lied to me about it. This was not the reason we broke up, but it was the cherry on a very crapy cake.

Blokes who cheat generally have their reasons: not beer confusion or the usual rubbish that passes for explanation, but impulse, immaturity and indecision. The three Is, or rather, me me me.

I took back my friend because I love her, and also because I wasn't sleeping with her. But the bloke? No chance.

Any girl who takes back a cheat gets what they deserve. Taking back a cheat shifts the balance between you even further: you might as well change your Facebook occupation to 'walkover' – because he knows he can get away with it. In the end, he'll probably cheat again, because you took him back the first time – so why wouldn't he do it again?

If your boyfriend wants variety, give him an hour on the internet. But if his hands wander, if you don't get rid of him and he does it again then you've only got yourself to blame I'm afraid.

People can make mistakes says Emma Bartley

YES

I've forgiven my boyfriend for the short fling he had last year by telling myself things like 'He's really sorry', and 'It's partly my fault'. I know I sound a pushover but the thing is I love him.

James and I had been together five years when he went to work in Africa. I was very unhappy about it and kept threatening to leave him.

We had a few blazing rows, and he said he'd cheated because he'd felt insecure and lonely. And because she was so 'small' (I'm 5ft 10in). It made him feel like more of a man.

About a month later, James sent me a letter saying how sorry he was. When I didn't respond, he turned up in tears, saying he couldn't live without me. I know him pretty well, and I believed him. If you don't give it another go you could lose the best thing that happened to you.

Since then he's been a model boyfriend. I think the shock of the split has made us appreciate each other more. No one is ever going to be perfect. The key to a good relationship is to love them anyway.

SHOULD YOU DUMP A CHEATER? Email us at more.asks@emap.com

Pictures: Alpha